STRATFORD PUBLIC LIBRARY SUPPORTS LIFELONG LEARNING

Ever wonder how to easily achieve your personal and professional goals? Stratford Public Library now offers a digital resource that does just that. Select from over 5,000 video courses taught by recognized experts in web design, marketing, software development and education, photography, video/music/audio editing, 3D animation, graphic design, and more.

Library users can now access free online video tutorials in many areas such as technology, business, marketing, and creativity. Access is self-paced, on demand 24/7 and unlimited, online and through mobile apps for both iOS and Android devices.

“We’ve been hoping to bring Lynda on board for a while,” states the Library’s Director of Public Service, Wendy Hicks. She expressed that “we appreciate that people are busy, and the flexibility to learn when the time is available is critical.”

There is something for everyone with this new database. The subject range covers nearly all of the standard software programs as well as how to write a bestseller, understand everyday statistics, manage your time, or even take better photo portraits.

Sign up for Lynda.com free, with your library card. Any librarian will be happy to help give you demonstration of Lynda the next time you are in the library. Get started at splibrary.ca/lynda.
